Through a competitive Request for Proposal (RFP), Hartman-Cox Architects, with a group of experts on Archives projects, was competitively awarded the AE services to design the new archive spaces for the District. Hartman-Cox Architects design team has completed the programming and feasibility phase of this project.

It would be prudent to retain the services of Hartman-Cox Architects design team to continue with the design phase for the following reasons:

- For about three (3) years of engagement with major stakeholders, Hartman-Cox Architects has developed a well-suited program and square footage spaces needed to support and to accommodate the staff, agency's operational capacity and efficiency.
- Members of the design team possess the institutional knowledge that is required to successfully complete the scope of required services within the time frame required. By virtue of the firm's involvement in the project from the project's inception and serving as the Architecture, Engineer (A/E) firm and special consultants of record, the team possesses unique and valuable knowledge.
- Hartman-Cox Architects has submitted various program and feasibility study reports for various proposed sites.
- Their knowledge is essential to interpret the programming and feasibility studies of various sites that they have submitted. This knowledge will be critical to achieving the successful development of design and construction documents necessary for the construction and completion of the proposed District's new archive within the proposed timeframe.
- In addition, continuity in service delivery is paramount to the success of the project.
- The introduction of a new architect and engineering firm at this juncture will jeopardize the timely completion of the project and may result in significant and unnecessary increases in costs.

Based on the above facts, it is in the best interest of the District to authorize Hartman-Cox Architects, the A/E team of record, to perform the design phase, which include Title I and Title II for the proposed new archive facility. This will ensure continuity in the project implementation process and will result time and cost savings
